I believe a sustainable architecture is one that can be adapted through change in time, use, and inhabitants. Therefore, I am interested in designing flexible infrastructures through minimal interventions which address multiple scales - from the individual to the collective, and eventually the city. My methods look to respond to, rather than impose on, any given context by searching for its existing spatial rhythm; then through means of correcting, exaggerating, and appropriating site conditions, find the most suitable spatial solution.

I have taught at the University of Hong Kong, and am often invited as a guest critic at the Hong Kong Polytechnic University and the University of Hong Kong.
